Extremely Interesting
New Discovery of

Palace Tower, where the Wicked Princess
Marguerite de Bourgogne
Held her Historic Orgies Four Centuries Ago.

THE ANCIENT TOWER OF NESLE, ON THE BANKS OF THE SEINE, PARIS (FROM OLD WOODCUT BY LEONARDE BROS.)

THE building which possessed the most romantic and gruesome associations in all ancient Paris was the Tour de Nesle. It was here that the infamous Princess Marguerite de Bourgogne received her lovers and afterward caused them to be thrown into the River Seine.

The Tour de Nesle was even more interesting than the Bastille. It is more than two hundred years since the famous tower was pulled down, but the memory of the deeds that happened there lives vividly in history.

And now, after all these centuries, an actual and very interesting portion of the Tour de Nesle has been discovered. While workmen were engaged recently in excavating ground for the foundations of a new building about two hundred feet from the Institut de France, which is on the left bank of the Seine, they broke unexpectedly into an ancient tunnel. It was arched and paved with stone and just high enough to permit the passage of a man walking upright. The stone roof was still black in places with the smoke of torches. When the explorers had groped their way for a few feet along the tunnel they found a cell leading from it, and in this the skeleton of a man chained to the wall. Archaeologists decided that this tunnel led to the site of the Tour de Nesle, and that in former times it connected the palace of the Princess with the lonely tower where she held her orgies. Further investigation brought to light considerable portions of the foundations of the tower.

The Tour de Nesle was one of four towers built in very early times by King Philip Augustus to defend Paris. It was 120 feet high and stood on a tongue of land projecting into the Seine. A fortified wall connected it with a royal palace standing several hundred feet back from the river.

The Princess Marguerite de Bourgogne, who made this tower the scene of her exploits, was born in 1210, and died in 1216. She married Louis le Hutin, son of Philippe le Bel, King of France. She was very beautiful and witty and indignantly fond of pleasure and luxury. After some years, in which rumor made free with her reputation, she and her two sisters, the Princesses Jeanne and Blanche de Bourgogne, were accused

HUGGED BY A BIG BABOON

Always out of the dark I shall expect to see him jump forth to hug me to death as the gorilla does the beautiful maiden in Fremiet's sculpture, and as Cupid himself came so near doing with me that night in New York.

To tell how it all happened is hard, for my nerves are not yet recovered from the shock. Even if I were gifted with the

"CUPID," THE POWERFUL YELLOW-FACED AFRICAN BAROON.

The Botherome Head of Lady Gould.

This Remarkable Murderess Must Be Guillotined--- BUT to Cut Off Her Head at Monte Carlo Would Mar the Season at the Gay Gambling Resort; to Execute Her Across the Border in France Is Unlawful; to Commute Her Sentence Would Be Unpopular.

THE SATCHEL.

Embarrassing Problem of Where to Cut Off Lady Gould's Head.

An extraordinary and bloody dilemma confronts the authorities of Monaco, the gambling municipality where such little crime, misery, sin and bloodshed have originated.

The dilemma is whether to guillotine Lady Gould, the aristocratic murderess, and bury the crowd of multimillionaires, fashionables and adventurers of all kinds who flock to Monte Carlo in this season, or whether to commute her sentence and thus outrage popular sentiment.

Lady Gould committed a crime so brutal, so revolting and so deliberate that she was sentenced to be guillotined in spite of the interceding petitions against capital punishment that now prevail on the European continent. Her gravity has gained much more importance for judges is proved by the fact that when she sentenced her to death, they only condemned her husband, who was her accomplice, to life imprisonment.

She fired a woman friend to her house thieves. Monaco, it may be explained, is about the queerest government existing in any civilized part of the world. It is nominally an American monarchy, under the rule of the Prince of Monaco, but it retains the rule of the French Republic, which completely surrounds it. The chief reason why the principality remains independent is that France does not care to bear the odium of licensing the gambling tables, but, on the other hand, does not care to drive away the army of visitors and the large number of cash which these tables apparently attract to the south of France. The foreign and military affairs of the municipality are entirely directed by France, but the principality is independent as to its internal affairs.

The government is very autocratic and paternal. For instance, no inhabitant of the principality is allowed to play at the gaming tables. The court which tried the recent murder case was a curious one, consisting of three local judges and three members of the Municipal Council. The decision of a majority controls, but in this case the judges were unanimous.

The death penalty has not been inflicted in Monaco within living memory, but it is undoubtedly legal. The French President has recently decided that he will not permit the use of the guillotine even in the most atrocious murder cases, but this decision does not apply to Monaco. France still has plenty of guillotines and several persons who know how to operate them, and she would be willing to lend an instrument and the operator of Monaco.

But the authorities of Monaco are now fully awake to the fact that a public execution would be disastrous to their business interests. This is the season when American multimillionaires, English dukes and duchesses and persons of wealth and distinction flock all over the world and settle in the town. Monaco is less than a square mile in extent, a spot of exquisite beauty on the shores of the blue Mediterranean. There are practically two places in it, the gambling establishment of Monte Carlo and the ancient town of Monaco, on the top of the hill, about half a mile away. A public execution would be visible from any part of the state, and even if it were held inside a building it could not fail to attract attention.

"An execution would most seriously offend the Riviera season," declared the director of the Casino. "It could not take place here, and they would not have it at Nice, for the same reason."

The execution of Lady Gould would gain the gambling officials, for several reasons. She is a person of rank and family, of the class that makes up a large part of the gamblers. She formerly had wealth which she spent at the gaming tables, and it would seem particularly wicked of those who profited by her losses to close her career by an execution. Moreover, the suicides that occasionally happen at the Casino annoy the officials so much that they do not wish the additional annoyance of having the specter of death officially exhibited in their vicinity.

It has been suggested that Lady Gould should be executed in France for execution, but this will probably be impossible, because it is illegal. Because the present French Government is opposed to capital punishment, and because the town in the vicinity of Monaco does not care to bear the disgrace of having a woman executed in their limits.

It has also been suggested that the prisoners might be sent to Spain or Italy for execution, but this plan has been dismissed because it is contrary to law and because France would not permit Monaco to hold communications with a foreign power. There remains the alternative that the Prince of Monaco, who has supreme authority in his territory, may commute the sentence to one of imprisonment.

This would excite great excitement among the population in and around Monaco, who regard Lady Gould as a murderess not deserving the slightest pity, and would be contrary to the intention of the judges who pronounced the death sentence although precedent was against it. Even if the government decided to act from which there is no satisfactory escape.

Mrs. Vene St. Lager Gould and his wife, Lady Gould, had lived at Monte Carlo for three years. They occupied a beautiful villa and entertained the cosmopolitan set of that place, which consists of a mixture of persons of wealth and high social position and of adventurers lured by the gaming tables. Gould is admitted to be the son of a deceased Irish baronet of considerable wealth. His elder brother, who inherited the title, is said to be still living in Australia, but the murderer's assumed title was hardly so called upon.

Lady Gould is a handsome woman of great intelligence and energy of character, but utterly unscrupulous, as many episodes before this tragedy have shown. She is of good French family, being the daughter of M. Hippolyte Goudin, Chateau La Sane, here. She was the widow of an English banker, and her married name is Gould. In London she conducted a fashionable dressmaking establishment, and then suddenly departed, leaving very large bills unpaid. She repeated this operation in Montreal. After that she was able to go to Monte Carlo with considerable fortune in her in luxury and comfortable horses to live in luxury and indulge her passion for gambling.

Sir Vere Gould, though of refined and aristocratic appearance, is a devoted creature, a helpless tool in the hands of his villainous wife. He is, moreover, hopelessly addicted to drink.

Among their friends at Monte Carlo was Mrs. Emma Levin, the pretty widow of a Swedish officer, and the daughter of a wealthy merchant in Stockholm. She and the Goulds were extremely intimate and relied one another by enduring miseries. Like them, she was the victim of the gambling passion.

Lady Gould fell into money difficulties and borrowed $2,000 from Mrs. Levin. The widow then spent all her current funds upon the gambling tables and the income of the Casino and proved her sentence was rendered with loud cries of fraud for present. It was then that the approval.

Goulds would get to a little less party. She came with most of her jewels on, according to her custom.

Sir Vere Gould engaged her in conversation and Lady Gould took up behind and reached her to death with a knife. The three years. They then retired to the room in which they usually sat in to go over with a butcher's cleaver and parked the head in a trunk, while they put the head in a large value. Sir Vere Gould also placed two bottles of whiskey and some sensational yellow-backed cards to the value which he carried himself. He was intended to make his journey a pleasant one. They departed from Monte Carlo.

At Marseilles they left the train and went to a hotel for the night. As their trunk was placed in a cab, a porter named Louis Pons noticed that blood was dripping from it. He called Gould's attention to this, but the criminal replied calmly that some one else had just shot were in the trunk. The porter, however, gave the proper information to the police, and the whole matter of the murder is the revelation of the dreadful crime. But for the porter's action it seems that they would have got away with their loot.

At the trial the prosecutor demanded that the prisoners be immediately released from prison.

"Like vultures over a dead body, this couple fought for the jewels, never chaste couple fought for the jewels, never were they remorseful, only greedy and fearful," he explained.

Gould himself confessed at the trial that he shot his wife, saying that he did not want to save his wife, and the Court utterly rejected his version of the murder. The public prosecutor asked for the condemnation of both prisoners to death, but the court decided that the woman had been the instigator of the crime and had despatched her husband throughout and, therefore, only inflicted the supreme penalty on her.

The trial case occupied three days. During its progress the people displayed the utmost interest in the case, and the sentence was rendered with loud cries of approval.

Famous Proverbs About Women.

The treatment that womanhood receives in the province of various peoples, on the whole, is far from complimentary.

Among the Spanish maxims one of the "Women and make they suffer when created, thus covered." Another is: "The man who much you loves his wife. Here are a few more:

Man is low; woman is der, and she will sleep the bottom.

The tears of women are worth much though they cost little.

The proverb of the Arab place a very low value on women. Here are some samples:

The beauty of a man is in his spirit; the spirit of woman is in her beauty.

When you want to get square with a man, give him a handsome wife; when you want revenge on a woman, give her a handsome husband.

Always consult your wife, but do as you please.

The Hindus are not much more respectful than the Arabs. They say:

The compass is like your shadow; chase her and she flies from you, see from her and she chase you.

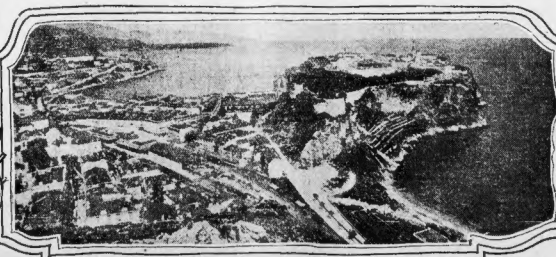

Do you want to test the strength of gold? Test it. The strength of an act? Beat it. The nature of a man? Let him talk. The thoughts of a woman? There's no way.

Start comes the cynical Chinese with a cutting maxim:

The tongue of a woman is a dagger; as never less it grows rusty. The spirit of a woman is of quiver and her heart is of wax.

They are gathered on the deck of a ship, with some standing and others sitting or kneeling. The lower portion of the image shows a large crowd of people, also in white uniforms, gathered on the deck of a ship. In the foreground, two large cannons are visible, pointing towards the right. The background shows the masts and rigging of the ship.

Suspense.

W HEN OLIVE stepped into the room, she found the door ajar, and a faint light came from within. She opened the door and looked in. The room was empty, but she saw a shadow on the wall. She stepped forward and saw a figure in the doorway. It was a man, and he was looking at her. She started back, and he stepped forward. He was a man of middle age, with a high forehead and a serious expression. He was wearing a dark suit and a white shirt. He looked at her for a moment, and then he spoke.

"You are Olive Parmenter," he said.

"Yes," she answered.

"I am Mr. Marchmont," he said.

"What for?" she asked.

BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1907.

Time to Think About the New Year

0 f this year two weeks and two days remain to us. Let us talk of plans for the year that begins sixteen days from now.

But first, let us make up our minds TO DO THE BEST THAT WE CAN WITH THESE LAST SIXTEEN DAYS OF 1907.

We ought to plan for next year. We ought to determine that we will not be among the failures, among the broken-promise men, when 1908 is finished.

The best way to prepare for the next year, the best way to make up for any disappointments or failures of this passing year, IS TO USE THE NEXT SIXTEEN DAYS AS WELL AS WE KNOW HOW.

The best fights are won at the END. Victory comes to one or the other side AT THE END of every battle. The LAST FEW MINUTES of an all-day fight settle the result very often.

The last few days and hours of this year may retrieve the year if it has disappointed us. IN any case, manly, steady, determined effort NOW—to-day, to-morrow will prepare us to carry out earnestly the plans for 1908 and the other years ahead.

Earnest men and women and children should not let these last days of the year go by without planning ahead, with careful thought and honest self-examination, for the resolutions of this New Year.

Two weeks from next Wednesday we all open a new page in our lives—a clean page. In proportion to our abilities we can write on it what we please. We can't all of us write greatness on the page. But if we will WE CAN ALL KEEP FROM WRITING MISERABLE FAILURE. We can keep from writing down the breaking of resolutions, the self-indulgence that have made other years sad, and that to many of us make the good resolutions of this year seem almost a mockery.

NO FAILURE if

It Will Be a Critical Year for Many. What Will YOU Write on That Page for 1908?

a man does honestly his very best. There are certain things that every one of us ought to do, and CAN do if we will make up our minds to do them.

Every one of us knows the thing that he ought to give up.

We should get ready for the year that is about to begin, ready for another plucky effort, as a man gets ready for a race or a battle, with careful preparation and training.

The whole of each man's life as an individual depends upon his ability to conquer himself. Our usefulness and place in the world depend on what we actually accomplish.

We may shout with the mob, criticise one man, admire the other.

But nothing counts for us or against us EXCEPT WHAT WE OURSELVES DO.

What are YOU going to do with this New Year? Think it over solemnly every day for the next sixteen days. Try not to deceive yourself. Don't invent excuses for yourself. Don't try to unload your failures or your disappointments on other people's shoulders.

You are responsible to YOURSELF, responsible to those that depend on you, responsible to the world that expects every man to be a credit to his father and mother by using fully the power inherited.

If you were going to write a book you would think carefully over the beginning. And you would plan out a long time in advance the various chapters. You would not undertake to write a book in Greek if ignorant of Greek.

YOU ARE GOING TO WRITE A NEW BOOK IN 1908. It will be one of a few volumes that make up your life. It will be a very important year to all of us. Every year is important, but it may safely be said that the year just coming will be unusually full of meaning, full of opportunity for the determined man, full of disappointments and sorrows for the weak man who will not keep on struggling.

Look hopefully ahead. The man who wins a fight is THE MAN WHO FEELS THAT HE IS GOING TO WIN IT. The man who expects defeat is half-beaten already.

Study yourself, study your defects, criticise your performance in the year that is closing. Begin this new year with good resolutions and WITH ALL YOUR WILL POWER

BEHIND THEM.

Don't be ashamed of good resolutions; don't be laughed out of them, no matter how many you may have broken. The will becomes strong by repeated efforts.

Try, clinch your teeth, remind yourself every day that nothing counts except honorable success. No matter how many times you have fallen or failed make up your mind that this time YOU WILL GET UP AND STAY UP.

THINK OVER your resolutions, sift them out, don't make too many, hold fast to those that you finally choose. And good luck and success go with your effort for 1908.

Politics Should Be Public, Not Private Business

There are before this country today many great and important questions. The future prosperity and peace of the nation will depend very largely on their settlement.

Among these are the money question, which is behind all business; the problem of our relations with Japan, the matter of the future of the Philippines, the regulation of labor and the control of the railroads, and the great corporations.

Who is to pass upon these important matters? Who is to decide what is to be done?

Congress primarily; secondarily, the State legislatures; third, the courts, who, after laws are made, will decide whether or not they are in accord with the highest written law of the country, which we call the Constitution.

The legislatures, who in the coming year are to determine whether or not the country is to be prosperous or unprosperous, and whether the people are to be happy or unhappy, are chosen, under the Constitution, by the people.

Under the Constitution—yes. Under the Constitution the people have full authority to put whomsoever they please into office, to remove whomsoever they please from office. Their POWER is unquestioned. It is clearly set forth in the Constitution, and even the most reactionary of all judges do not dispute the Constitution is supreme.

But how is this power thus vested in the people exercised? Do the people in FACT as well as in THEORY select their own legislators? Some of them do. The rest are selected for them by men who make public affairs their private business.

But even in cases where the people actually select their own representatives in legislative bodies, where they select a popular man and put him in office because of some popular thing he has done, how often do they think for an instant of his qualifications for the office he is to fill before electing him to it?

In this country, the management of the great corporations is almost invariably successful. Why? Because those in control of the corporations are shrewd enough to pick out only the best men that can be found for the various positions of authority.

Because a man has been a brave and gallant soldier does not qualify him for the superintendency of a steel mill. The only way he can become the superintendent of a steel mill is by proving that he can make steel better and more cheaply than the man who holds the job at present.

A railroad president is not elected because of his social or political prominence. He is chosen as a business man.

It is seldom that mistakes are made in choosing men for the important posts in corporation life.

The reason is very clear. THE MEN WHO CONTROL THE CORPORATIONS MAKE IT THEIR BUSINESS TO KNOW WHAT IS GOING ON IN THEIR LINE. THEY KNOW ALL ABOUT THE QUESTIONS THAT MUST BE SETTLED, BECAUSE THEY HAVE STUDIED THEM. THEY KNOW WHAT MEN ARE FIT FOR THESE POSITIONS, AND THEY ARE NEVER MISLED BY OTHER MEN'S MISERRATIONS SAVE THOSE OF PURE BUSINESS EXPERIENCE.

When the people of this country, who can and ought to control their own government, learn that lesson from the business men, there will be no more danger of "Graft" and crooked politics robbing their property.

Big business concerns are seldom looked by statesmen—had they been in control are seldom robbed. They know their business, and are going on. They take good care that no thieves are appointed to offices to administer their business.

It would be full as easy for the people to select their own government and to manage it so successfully that vast public improvements could be made in a few years, and every abated and universal education provided for all, and the money that now is carried away by professional politicians.

If every voter will interest himself in the money question and study it if he understands it; if he will view the money question from all sides, if he will make an intelligent survey of the money situation, and, above all, if he will try to find what men are fit for office and do his utmost to secure the election of those men, we will get the kind of a government that the Constitution guarantees.

TEDDY-B AND TEDDY-G; THE BEAR DETECTIVES.

VERSES BY SEYMOUR EATON.

DRAWINGS BY C. H. TWELVETREES.

V.—The Missing Slipper

THE fame of the Bears had spread about
Of how they scattered dread and doubt
By solving mysteries quick and sure
For boys and girls both rich and poor;
And doing it, too, from day to day
Without a single cent of pay.
The papers said that Little-Bo-Peep
Was going about with six tailless sheep
Just advertising the Teddy Bears
And singing their praises everywhere.

One bright forenoon when TEDDY-B
Was cooking lunch out by a tree,
And TEDDY-G, without coat or cap
Stretched on a log, was having a nap.
Two little girls, one in brilliant hood,
Came up the path and beside them stood.
One little girl was poorly dressed
And seemed quite sad and much distressed.
But the other girl just laughed to see
The lunch being cooked by TEDDY-B.

"Good morning, Red Riding Hood," said he;
"You little mischief, don't laugh at me;
That pot contains a pigeon stew;
'Twill taste all right when I get through
But tell me why your friend is sad,
Can't I do something to make her glad?"

"Just wait a minute," as TEDDY-G she saw;
"I want to wake him with a straw
By tickling his ear and hairy paw."
She kept it up till he laughed right out
And rolled off the log and danced about.
And then to TEDDY-B she turned
And said, "Your stew is getting burned,
It needs more water; the pot is dry;
Instead of a stew you'll have a fry."
She then presented her friend and chum
And told the Bears just why they'd come.

"Cinderella's her name; she's a city child
And feels quite nervous in woods so wild.
If she'll excuse me, I'll tell to you
Just what she wants you Bears to do;
Her mother's dead; she was kind and sweet.
The loveliest mother on all the street;
Her father, too, was true and good
Till he married again," said Red Riding Hood.
"A lady great with daughters two,
Who lived in style and princes knew."

"One bright forenoon when TEDDY-B
Was cooking lunch out by a tree."

Carrying about her slipper small
Which dropped from her foot as she left the hall
Frying 'to find a foot,' 'twas said,
To fit the slipper and the girl to wed.
But she must produce the slipper's mate
And wear the two to seal her fate.

"Well, isn't that lucky?" said TEDDY-B;
"A letter came last night to me
By royal messenger, riding fast,
And scaring the child with trumpet blast.
He delivered the letter on a golden plate
And a slipper sealed with the seal of state.
Said TEDDY-G in his comic way:
'This messenger was so proud and gay
That I made him get off his fancy steed'
And get down on his knees; I did, indeed.
TEDDY-B looked cross and shook his head.
'The letter was signed by a prince,' he said.
'And written, too, in the boldest hand
And said, 'Teddy Bears; I you command
To find a slipper the mate of this,
And the girl who lost it, a pretty miss.
For this pretty miss I mean to wed;
Deliver both, you must.' It said
And I want it known o'er all the land
That a royal prince must not command
A Teddy Bear to do this or that;
These orders from kings we refuse them flat."

Said Cinderella, "Please, don't get cross,
For I'm that miss and I'm at a loss
Just what to do, for I love the prince,
I have loved him every minute since
I saw his face at the royal ball,
He's kind and good and brave and tall
I have the slipper, but my distress
Is how to find a wedding dress,
Or the fairy godmother, without delay,
And that's what brought us here to-day."

"Oh, that's all right," TEDDY-B replied.
"The fairy godmother I'll provide,
And anything else which Bears can do
To help a girl as sweet as you
When you're a queen we'll make a call.
Or go to dinner, or attend a ball;
For you should know, and Red Riding Hood,
That Teddy Bears have royal blood.
But try on the slippers and we shall see
A fairy godmother, perhaps two or three."
At the touch of foot to each magic shoe
There appeared a beautiful cloak of blue.
And then a wedding gown of white
And pearls and lace and diamonds bright.
A wedding outfit all complete,
From veil and gloves to slippered feet.
The news was sent to the prince straightaway
And the wedding was held that very day;
And this is how, as you have seen,
The cinder-maid became a queen.

"And then a wedding gown of white
And pearls and lace and diamonds bright."

The two daughters every duty shirked,
They lived to dress and never worked,
And for Cinderella they didn't care;
They made her wash and dress their hair.

And wait on them from morn till night,
And sit in a chimney out of sight.
Where black with cinders she became,
And that is how she got her name.
The story's long, to tell it all,
But there was given a famous ball
By the favorite prince in the royal hall.
And sure enough sealed letters came,
Inviting the two, in the prince's name,
To attend the ball, and all they went,
Dressed in their best, on pleasure bent.
Poor Cinderella was left behind
And teased and treated most unkind.

"Just wait a bit," said TEDDY-G,
"Till I stir the stew and put on some tea."
"Now, Cinderella," said Red Riding Hood,
"I'll help TEDDY-G to cook the food,
And you tell TEDDY-B the rest
Of this royal story; you know it best."

She told TEDDY-B of her unhappy plight
Till her fairy godmother came that night
And dressed her complete from head to toe
In a gown of silk, and row on row
Of pearls and diamonds, and snowy lace,
And slippers of glass her feet to grace.
And a coach and four in grandest style
To ride to the ball scarce half a mile.
And then she told how she met the prince,
And how he looked for her ever since.

"Just wait a minute," as TEDDY-G she saw,
"I want to wake him with a straw."

He was elected pastor of the Methodist conference, to take place in 1903, at Portland, Ore. Mr. Patton's health has been steadily improving, and he has been able to do his parish work, and to visit his friends in the West. The Incomparable WHITE The Car for Service

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES OF THE WHITE LIMOUSINE

The exclusive White quality of "absolute noiselessness" operation is of particular advantage in a limousine because, in a car with a closed body, any noise made by the mechanism is even more noticeable and annoying than in an open vehicle.

Another exclusive White quality, namely, genuine flexibility of control, permits of the machine being guided safely and speedily through the crowded city streets. The speed of the White may be accommodated to the exigencies of street traffic without any changing of gears, jerky starts or the embarrassing and sometimes dangerous "stalling" of the engine.

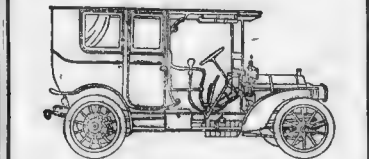

As regards graceful lines and luxuriousness of equipment and finish, the White Limousine must be seen to be appreciated.

Let us show you the unequalled luxury and comfort of the White Limousine
